

NanoInnovation got talents - Competition for young researchers

Nanoinnovation is the Italian event of reference for the scientific community dealing with nanotechnologies. Nanoinnovation, a national event of reference for the scientific community dealing with nanotechnologies promoted by Airi - the Italian industrial research Association - has invited young researchers under 35 to present their work in a special session supported by Bracco Foundation.

The Scientific Committee of the Conference chooses the best proposals and the authors will be able to present their research to a large, high-profile public of industrialists, experts, investors, scientists and company representatives.

Research topics must be in line with those of the Convention, which is open to international guests, concerning nanotechnologies and their integration with enabling technologies.
