Bracco Foundation organised in collaboration with the Municipality of Genoa the Third National Conference on city suburbs “10,100, 1000 Centres” on Monday, October 4, 2021, to reflect on urban regeneration through science and culture.

This appointment follows the first two National Conferences on city suburbs, organised by Bracco Foundation in Milan in 2018 and in Palermo in 2019, which highlighted how crucial it is to share the results of new paradigms tried out in particular on city suburbs, to guide with vision and competence developed that sees in the city its central particle. Also indispensable is collaboration between public and private and among networks of subjects engaged in various ways the evolution of urban contexts.

Starting from these premises, Bracco Foundation in collaboration with the Municipality of Genoa is promoting the Third National Conference, hosted in Palazzo Ducale and in the suburbs of Genoa, with the aim of continuing in a concrete way, also in the light of the profound impact of the pandemic, reflection on urban realities.

The conference saw the presentation of concrete cases, offered as practices that can highlight key themes, and a deep look at international experiences. Starting from these stimuli, technical round tables tackled the use of the contribution of science and culture as levers for development, on the one hand with a session on democratic science, on the other with a focus on culture has a flywheel for social inclusion, and the issue of the well-being of cities from two complementary points of view: a focus on urban regeneration as a method and process, and subjective individual well-being in the suburbs.
